Adam represents entrepreneurs and public and private companies across the country on a wide range of corporate matters while providing comprehensive advice on corporate and business issues, including mergers and acquisitions, securities law compliance and significant corporate transactions.

His practice includes all aspects of M&A transactions — from managing extensive cross-departmental due diligence projects to the drafting and negotiation of definitive purchase agreements and ancillary agreements — commercial contract drafting and corporate entity strategy and formation.

Adam counsels clients in the negotiation, structuring and implementation of joint ventures and other strategic relationships. He has advised clients ranging from early-stage companies and family-owned businesses to large serial acquirers across a variety of industries, including technology, life sciences, manufacturing, energy, and health care.

As a member of the firm's private equity and venture capital groups, Adam counsels entrepreneurs and major institutional investors in all manner of private equity, venture capital, real estate, and hedge fund investments. He reviews and negotiates in dozens of funds each year, utilizing Thompson Coburn's knowledge of industry trends to identify issues and negotiate solutions.

Prior to receiving his law degree from Saint Louis University, Adam worked with multiple start-up teams, gaining insight into the evolving issues facing the start-up and venture communities. That experience gives Adam an in-depth understanding of the complexities facing corporations in evolving environments and the responsive legal counsel needed to expand and succeed.
