Catherine works with health care clients in a variety of transactional and regulatory matters.

Catherine helps clients navigate the complex health care regulatory environment and works to help structure deals in compliance with these rules and regulations.

Catherine assists with due diligence on transactional matters, including mergers and acquisitions, and drafting of various closing documents, including operating agreements, letters of intent and non-reliance letters.

Catherine earned her J.D. cum laude from Loyola University Chicago School of Law and was executive editor of publications of the Law Journal. In addition to a law degree, Catherine earned certificates in health law and compliance.

During law school, Catherine worked for Rush Hospital Systems doing various research and compliance assignments, where she gained knowledge on how a healthcare system operates and the issues that closely affect it. She also worked for the Federation of State Medical Boards summarizing and researching various waivers and laws in each of the 50 states during the COVID-19 pandemic.

In addition, she spent some time at a smaller law firm that worked with practitioners where she gained insight into the various legal issues affecting the providers and how to establish a managed services arrangement.
