Evelyn focuses on international trade and finance matters to guide clients in various sectors.

Evelyn draws on her experience working with government agencies and projects to navigate her clients through complex matters such as import/export regulations, international sanctions, product classifications, and comprehensive due diligence evaluations. She advocates for clients by preparing product and tariff classification protests, export disclosures, and internal auditing reports to keep businesses apprised of risks and mitigate potential legal issues. Additionally, Evelyn counsels clients in the energy and finance sectors on regulatory compliance and refinancing matters.

She has supported the litigation group in cases by performing legal research, drafting pleadings and other documents, assisting case management with conducting document reviews and monitoring client communications.

Evelyn received her J.D. from Washington and Lee University School of Law, where she served as the Symposium Editor for the Washington and Lee Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice.
