Although I handle business disputes of all kinds, I have a particular concentration in resolving problems for religious institutions and banks.

overview

Cathie Schroeder is a business litigator defending clients in all types of business disputes. Her experience is particularly extensive in representing religious and banking institutions.

With 26 years of litigation experience, Cathie defends clients in state and federal courts and state appellate courts throughout Missouri and Illinois. Drawing on her experience, she provides sophisticated, effective legal strategies that support client goals.

Cathie started her legal career in 1984 as a paralegal. This provided a strong professional foundation for her extensive work handling complex commercial matters at trial and in arbitrations.
